UNIVERSITY OF MALTA
L-Università ta' Malta

The beginning

The University of Malta traces its origins to the founding of the Collegium Melitense which was set up through direct papal intervention on 12 November 1592. This college was run by the Jesuits on the lines of their other colleges established elsewhere and known as 'Collegia Externorum', catering for non-Jesuit students. By a papal Bull of Pope Pius IV, dated 29 August 1561, confirmed later by a further Bull of Pope Gregory XIII, dated 9 May 1578, the Jesuits were empowered to confer the degrees of Magister Philosophiae and Doctor Divinitatis. However, the foundation deed specified that besides Philosophy and Theology, other subjects such as Grammar and the Humanities should also be taught. Following the abatement of the plague of 1675, Grandmaster Nicolò Cotoner appointed Fra Dr Giuseppe Zammit as 'lettore' in Anatomy and Surgery at the Sacra Infermeria on 19 October 1676. This attempt at formalising medical teaching at the Order's hospital is considered by many as the beginning of our medical school. Zammit went on to establish the first medical library on the island as well as a medicinal herb garden in one of the ditches of Fort Saint Elmo.

The establishing of the University

After the expulsion of the Jesuit Order from Malta in 1768, Grandmaster Pinto appropriated all the revenue accruing from its property on the island with the aim of establishing a 'Pubblica Università di Studi Generali'. The decree constituting the University was signed by Pinto on 22 November 1769, having been authorised to do so by the papal Brief, 'Sedula Romani Pontifici', received on 20 October 1769. On 25 May 1771, a Collegio Medico was set up as one of the faculties making up the University. At the time of the foundation of the University, the 'Principe dell'Accademia dei

Medici' was the surgeon Michelangelo Grima who also held the combined chair of Anatomy and Surgery at the Medical School, whilst the Professor of Medicine was Giorgio Locano.

The first rector of the University was Fr Roberto Costaguti of the Servites' Order who had in previous years established a reputation as a preacher. A number of other foreign professors were brought over to help establish the University and these were installed in June 1771. They all lived together in the former Jesuit College. It appears that the Medical Faculty was the only one staffed solely by local teachers, a tradition which has been maintained throughout the centuries.

Soon after Grandmaster Pinto died his successor, Grandmaster Ximenes, reduced the number of chairs and expelled all expatriate staff as an economic measure. During the brief French interregnum formal University teaching came to an end as Napoleon abolished the University five days after landing in Malta on 18 June 1798. Fortunately, a few weeks after the French were forced to leave, Sir Alexander Ball reinstated the University and appointed as rector Canon F.X. Caruana on 28 October 1800 in recognition of his services during the uprising against the French.

The first rector appointed by the Governor Sir Thomas Maitland, at the beginning of British sovereignty, was the Dominican Fr Gerolamo Inglott, the Professor of Philosophy. During the British period the University underwent a series of changes in its statutes and regulations bringing it into line with universities in the United Kingdom. The present coat of arms and the motto 'Ut Fructificemus Deo' were proposed on 1 March 1923 by the rector, Professor Sir Themistocles Zammit. Between 1937 and 1974, (when Malta became a Republic) the University petitioned for and obtained the right to the use of the word 'Royal' in its title.

After the Second World War

Following the Second World War, the Library and support structures were strengthened. The Evans Laboratories were opened in 1959 to house the Faculty of Science near the old hospital of the Knights in Valletta and a new Medical School building near St Luke's Hospital in Guardamangia was opened in 1968. At the same time, the new campus at Msida was inaugurated. The Faculty of Mechanical and Electrical Engineering (now, the Faculty of Engineering) and the Faculty of Education became part of the University when the former Polytechnic (known also as the Malta College of Arts, Science and Technology) was incorporated with it.

The language of instruction is English

To all prospective politicians: Maltese language problems!

Roderick (Rigu) Bovingdon NSW - AUSTRALIA

With the prospect of a national election looming ahead, hoping all concerned (with emphasis on our politicians) openly lay their cards on the table to conscientiously tackle the lingering challenge of Our Indigenous Maltese Language! The Act of Parliament in its current state, that created the National Council for the Maltese Language, gives the said Council absolute authority – carte blanche – over OUR language by publishing legal directives concerning Maltese in the Government Gazette.

The sole ownership of the Maltese language belongs exclusively to the Maltese people, collectively and individually, all with equal claim to its authorship! More specifically Section 2, Article 6/2 of Chapter 470 of the Government Gazette, needs to be completely expunged from the said Act. For it is this particular Section which bestows absolute legislative authority upon the National Council to make changes to the Maltese Language as it sees fit by decree published in the Government Gazette. Such measure usurps true ownership of the Maltese Language from the Maltese people who created it.

To me and to a large number of leading Maltese thinkers and writers, the said clause becomes an insult bordering on the betrayal and treason of the principal trait identifying us as unique within the world family of nations!

This basic truth is proven by the fact that modern civilised first world nations such as Canada, the USA, Australia and New Zealand do not possess a distinguishing language of their own necessitating them to use the language of Britain: English! Yet these same nations still feel the dire need to express their own singular origins as sovereign nations, independent of their British cultural ties, by adopting and by creating their own language variations (idioms, lemmas, pronunciation, intonation, semantics...). Their national desire to identify themselves as distinct from the British, without any inference of antagonism, inspires an ever-increasing linguistic corpora peculiar only to their people, thereby identifying them as Canadian, Australian, American and New Zealanders.

The still festering national language qualm in the case of Maltese – a language unique in its own right proudly having developed its own lexical and literary repertoire over centuries of social intermingling on the world stage – remains a gaping wound of national proportions that only serves as an ideal tool for dictatorial and despotic decisions. Not exactly the attitude and behaviour of highly cultured scholars whose only genuine modus operandi – if they truly cherish the sublime ingredients of their calling – ought to be! While an entire nation looks forward to their wise guidance in the proper and apt preservation of our unique national tongue, the language rut at all social levels proceeds with its momentum unabated. Stubborn pride and conceit in capriciously tampering with the wisdom of the Founding Fathers of Maltese can and will eventually lead to our language nihilism as happened historically in various corners of the world to so many other minority languages the memory of which persists merely in the archives of oblivion.

So hallowed, profound, personal and intrinsically unique is the nature of “language” – in all its human spoken and written forms – that no single individual (be they the Chief Justice of the land, the President or Prime Minister, the top Hierarchy of the local church, the Rector of the top institute of learning, et al) or any group, should ever hold absolute authority over a people’s tongue. For “language” evolves consciously and subconsciously, even incidentally, with all possible nuances that the human brain is ever capable of imagining, implying, intending ... Hence, I ask YOU dear reader-thinker, who on this earth has absolute right to legislate and enforce by decree upon this singular uniquely human limitless innate power? Certainly not by passing autocratic laws!

Human language (spoken and written) intrinsically incorporates a people’s deepest and most personal intricacies, including the celebrated communal triumphs and endured woes that its sole true owners accumulate and develop over centuries to the benefit of all.

Rules of grammar (including the entire linguistics corpus) and lexicons (dictionaries, word lists, glossaries, etc), owing to the transient ever changing nature of language, should be treated as significant “guidelines” but never as sine qua non or infallible dictums arrogantly imposed by legislation. Indeed these “rules” after all, know their origins from the earliest days of civilisation; they are not invented or composed at the whim of individual scholars. The scholar observes, collates, compares, analyses, scrutinises, then formulates the unwritten “rules” already extant within the established language structure into registered rules under the collective notion of “grammar”. Grammar is inherently and conceptually built into human language. The basic collective wisdom and knowledge upon which language is built and develops!

With profoundest respect towards the forebears who initialised as well as the worthy contribution of the current users, language should be left to develop always with reverence towards its collective communal users.

In view of the forthcoming national election, I invite all declared candidates of all colours and creeds, who present themselves to the Maltese public in the forthcoming national ballot, to publicly declare beforehand their understanding and intentions concerning the future of our unique Maltese Language.

Through your individual public declarations let the people of this proud nation know so all may be more suitably armed to participate more proactively in the preservation of the past and collective on-going wisdom of our own language that does not belong exclusively to the National Council of the Maltese Language nor the nation’s administration constituted by the entire National Parliament and the Judiciary.

Getting rid of the nominated offending Article incorporated within the Act is a non-negotiable necessity before it is too late. This should then be followed by a thorough review of the entire Act where archaisms such as artikolu and kapitolu instead of artiklu and kapitlu and all other concealed subtleties are clarified. Let no obscurities hover over vague modes of expression.

Before one can instruct others in the art of writing and speaking one’s tongue, such as the relentless attacks upon our journalists, let the would-be self-appointed fonts of wisdom first familiarise themselves more thoroughly with the people’s language with due sensitivity and respect towards our entire Maltese nation in toto. There is so much more to be done and time is rapidly running out while those responsible dilly-dally with our grandchildren’s survival as a nation.

A Blast from the Past

Recently, I was sent, by GozoTV, a couple of segments, recorded at my home, St. Dominic's Home for the Elderly, 'my' hospitals (Prince of Wales, Royal Hospital for Women, Sydney Children's) in Sydney, Australia in 2013, mostly about the status of the Maltese in Sydney. They were aired on MTV on the programme 'Malta u Lil Hinn Minnha'.

This was at the time of the resurgence of CMLA and FOMA in the minds of Maltese in Malta and especially when the current President of Malta, HE Dr. George Vella, was Minister for Foreign Affairs. The previous decade was a period of great benefit to Maltese overseas, since unsurpassed - dual citizenship for our successors in perpetuity, EU passports for Maltese-Australians and their progeny, citizenship for the Maltin tal-Egittu, renewal of the Health and Social Security Dual Agreements, stabilisation of the Pensions arrangements, formal recognition by Govt depts of the diaspora contributions in the arts, sport and business, vote in the European Parliament for dual MA citizens and increased involvement by Enterprise Malta, Social Security and Identity

Malta in our welfare. These were times of upheaval as well. The Malta Banks - BoV and HSBC - were withdrawing services from Australia, religious orders were reducing services with a view to disappearing from Australia altogether and our 'old' leaders were ageing and, sadly, dying off. Reverse migration had stopped and a new breed of professional and technical migrant was arriving from Malta. The 'clubs' were contracting, and social media was the way of the 'new Maltese'. Visits to Malta, especially in the off-season, by ex-pats and 2nd and 3rd generation MAs were at an unprecedented high and were becoming a sizeable proportion of 'tourists'; Tourism Malta was showing great interest.

The two segments I contributed to almost 10 years ago are still worth watching because the time has come to review our situation as we emerge from COVID and we re-establish our Malta links. We need Malta to produce a couple of similar Sydney-specific segments with our current leaders in control of our needs and the outlook for Maltese Australians.

The Three 'M's... your thoughts? The CCs (especially those who are non-Maltese-speaking)... hold fire for the time being...

I reckon that it is time to get our act together once again.... and to get behind the CMLA (Council for Maltese Living Abroad) to try to reengage Malta. Much has already been achieved but all has been quiescent, because of COVID travel and social restrictions for almost two years. Travel, trade and commerce are at a standstill... but everyone is ready to 'fly'. Plenty of plans, dreams and projects are in the pipeline and there is much enthusiastic expectancy. Time for a fresh start....

We, the readers of this journal in Malta and Gozo, love to read about the stories of Maltese who are living abroad. J. A Galea

THE ORDER OF MALTA AND UKRAINE DISASTER

Russian military attack on Ukraine, the Order of Malta's local relief corps (Maltijiska Slushba Dopomohy – MSD), active in the country since 1993, is trying to organize aid to the population amid a thousand difficulties.

"I've been on the phone since the early hours of this morning, talking to colleagues from all parts of the country, along the borders and in the east, where there are dramatic situations," said Pavlo Titko, head of the relief corps, in an interview on the German ARD broadcaster. "Unfortunately, many colleagues can't work with us yet because they first have to look after themselves and their families."

The Order of Malta's relief corps is organising a mobile canteen for displaced persons, expected to be in place very soon. It is also trying to set up logistics, supplies and technologies to help refugees. But the unexpected precipitation of events took everyone by surprise: "Until the end, nobody here thought it would be like this. Today we tried again to buy supplies, but there are long queues at the shops and at the checkouts. There is little food, only one package per person and a maximum of 20 litres of petrol per car. People have been waiting all day in front of pharmacies."

The relief corps is compiling a list of life-saving medicines and other emergency aid for refugees such as camp beds, blankets, food and cash. The greatest fear is that the basic infrastructure services will be interrupted, in particular water and electricity. "No one knows what will be bombed next. When the injured arrive in hospitals, they need all manner of medicines, which were already

In the aftermath of the scarce because of the economic crisis," Titko explains.

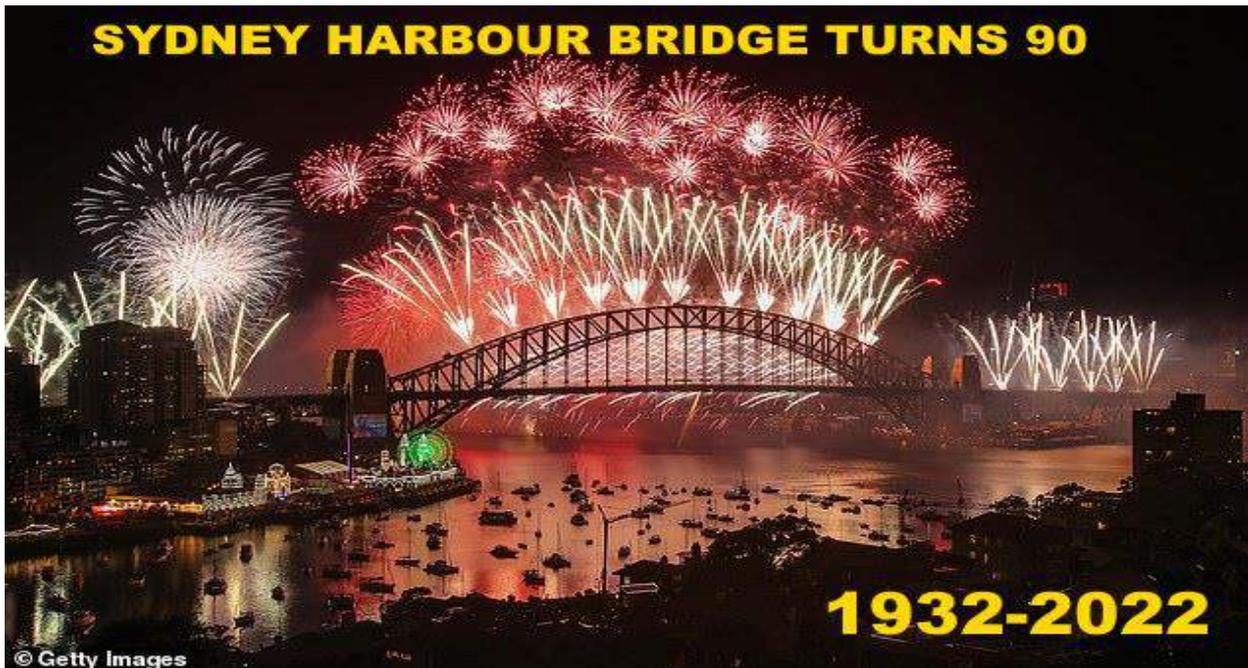

But the real problems could begin within two to three days, with the arrival of many refugees heading west from all over Ukraine and, above all, with the great uncertainty regarding the borders with Hungary and Poland: "We're expecting a massive flow of refugees and some are already here. Many want to push further west. There's a huge number of people at the Polish and Hungarian borders. In the town of Lviv (almost on the border with Poland) the majority of cars have other license plates and all hotels and apartments are full.

The most important question for humanitarian aid remains whether Russia will close the border with Poland and Hungary. It is difficult to predict what tomorrow will bring."

Volunteers of the Order of Malta are deployed in the Transcarpathia region of Ukraine, which is an area separated from the rest of Ukraine by the Carpathian Mountains, for now isolated from the war. It is the second most important refugee transit route, the gate to Hungary and Slovakia. Transcarpathia has a large Hungarian-speaking minority.

The Berehovo district Charity service of the Order of Malta – one of four local auxiliary offices of the Order in Ukraine – has set up an information centre at the Astey border crossing, where volunteers provide assistance to refugees arriving at the border. Once they have crossed into Hungary, the staff of the Hungarian Order of Malta Charity Service continue to assist.

Most of the refugee families speak only Ukrainian. The Order of Malta Charity Service in Berehove has produced a simple Hungarian-language form, that they fill out for those waiting at the border, stating the number of family members and their ages, whether they have any illness that requires treatment, where they want to go, and other pertinent information requested. These forms can later be handed over by the refugees to Hungarian helpers, thus speeding up and facilitating their reception and the organisation of their onward travel through Hungary. Volunteers also support an orphanage in Uzhhorod, where children fleeing Kiev are being accommodated. Because of the food shortages volunteers regularly drive carloads of supplies

Sydney Harbour Bridge Marks 90th Anniversary

THIS MONTH marks 90-years since the Sydney Harbour Bridge first opened to the public.

Arguably, Australia's most defining built structure, the Sydney Harbour Bridge, with its distinctive arched design was constructed soon after World War I, during the Great Depression. Over the next decade, 40,000 tonnes of steel and six million rivets would go into building the Sydney Harbour Bridge.

"The bridge was an early and very powerful symbol of the modern Australian project.

"It ties in with the idea of 'Australia unlimited' - where there were no limits to what a young nation could aim to do if its natural and human resources were harnessed to the full capacity using the latest engineering technology."

The grand opening, which saw anywhere from 300,000 to a million people turn out for the occasion, was somewhat marred by a member of the fascist New Guard group who rode through the crowd on a borrowed horse, cutting the ceremonial ribbon before the premier.

To some, the bridge is simply means of getting from one side of the city to the other, while for many others it remains a symbol of hope and opportunity.

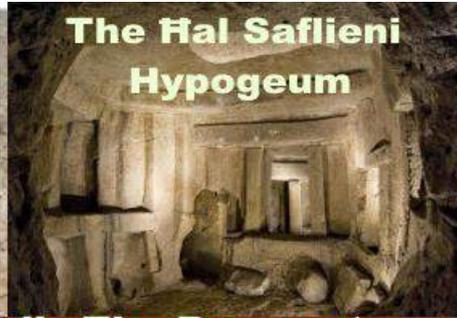

Former Governor-General of Australia, General Hurley said the bridge, says "so much about us as Australians and our capacity to overcome difficulty. That is who we were, who we are, and why I am optimistic about our future."

Today the bridge represents creativity, passion, humility, community, grit and stealth, resilience and strength. Beneath its grand arches and its surrounds, lies the Opera House, the Sydney Theatre Company, the Museum of Contemporary Arts, restaurants and cafes, hotels, shops, and buskers, ferries, private yachts and chartered boats.

It's also home to Sydney's famous New Year's Eve fireworks show, and is often used as an installation site for powerful social conversations and celebrations.

So, in celebrating 90-years of the Harbour Bridge, it seems only apt that finally in a gesture that will provide long-overdue recognition to traditional landowners, the Australian and Aboriginal flags fly side-by-side all year round on one of the countries great symbolic monuments.

Elongated “Alien” Skulls Found Inside Malta’s Ancient Hypogeum to be Examined in Cutting-Edge Study

Are Malta’s Secret Skulls The Remnants Of Prehistoric Aliens?

The structure was uncovered by accident in 1902, as construction workers were working on housing development. A year later in 1903, the first excavations of the temple were done by Manuel Magri, who directed the excavations on behalf of the Museums

An ancient mystery could soon be solved thanks to a cutting-edge study.

Elongated skulls are global phenomena. These mysterious skulls have been discovered in nearly all continents on the planet.

That’s why it is unsurprising to learn that a collection of elongated skulls has been found in Malta.

More specifically inside the Hal Saflieni hypogeum (Hal Saflieni Hypogeum). While the existence of the skulls has been known for more than 90 years, they’ve never been submitted to serious scientific work.

But now, a group of scientists from Malta and Australia is going to study the Skulls discovered in 1926 in detail, hoping to uncover some of the mysteries the skulls may

The elongated skulls were first discovered by Temi Zammit –who described the skulls as of the long variety (dolichocephalic)– at the Hal Saflieni hypogeum in 1926. And ever since, they’ve been the center for countless conspiracy theories.

The skulls were discovered in a subterranean structure in Paola, Malda. The Hypogeum of Hal Saflieni is believed to be more than 5,500 years old and is usually just referred to as the Hypogeum, which in Greek literally means Underground.

A Photograph of the Hypogeum of Hal-Saflieni made before 1910. Public Domain.

The structure itself is believed to have been an ancient sanctuary and necropolis. Inside it, researchers have discovered the remains of more than 7,000 individuals.

Committee. The structure consists of three different levels. It is believed that the Hypogeum’s upper level was the first to be excavated, and the middle and lower levels were later excavated and used.

One of the most noteworthy rooms inside the Hypogeum is located on the middle level. Called the Oracle room, the chamber is thought to have been described specifically for sound and vibrations. Scholars argue the ancients created the room to project changing and/or drumming through the rest of the Hypogeum.

The so-called Oracle room was most likely the place where ‘priests’ would produce sounds that they believed enhanced the effectivity of the rituals. Some authors even suggest that vibrations and sounds produced within the chamber were created for healing purposes.

The entire structure is believed to have been covered in ancient times by a kind of monument or surface shrine that was eventually destroyed, keeping the entire structure hidden from sight, for thousands of years. Given their strange look, it no surprise that some people have even put forth theories suggesting the skulls were alien.

And although the alien theory doesn’t seem to hold much water, the alien myth is an ongoing one.

Scholars argue that the elongated skulls fro Malta may have belonged to a culture which deliberately, and artificially elongated their skulls, something that cultures located thousands of kilometers away, in South America also did.

The most famous of American elongated skulls are those discovered in Paracas, Peru.

The Elongated skulls discovered in the Hypogeum are shrouded in mystery. Although not all skulls discovered inside it were artificially enlarged (only a small part of the skulls features this characteristic), the skulls were not properly documented, so not much information is available about them. As noted by ancient-wisdom, the skulls “have since disappeared without a trace, along with the 7,000 from the Hypogeum.”

“Only the photographs taken by the Maltese researcher Dr. Anton Mifsud and his colleague, Dr. Charles Savona Ventura, remain to testify the existence of the skulls and prove their abnormality. Books written by the two Maltese doctors, illustrate a collection of skulls that show peculiar abnormalities and/or pathologies. Sometimes inexistent cranial knitting lines abnormally developed temporal partitions, drilled and swollen occiputs as following recovered traumas, but above all, a strange, lengthened skull, bigger and more peculiar than the others, lacking the median knitting.” (Ancient Wisdom, retireved July 2019.)

But the elongated skulls did not vanish from sight. According to reports, no more than 20 elongated skulls of a total of around 7,000 have survived to this day, and they are about to be submitted to the first-ever interdisciplinary analysis that will hopefully shed light on their mysterious characteristics. As noted by Malta Today, the scientific study will see experts from Heritage Malta, the Superintendence of Cultural Heritage and Macquarie University of Sydney, Australia participate in a combined effort to understand more about the elongated skulls. The project titled “The Sentinels of ̄al Saflieni, Malta: Science Facts versus Science Fiction” will attempt to solve some of the mysteries behind the enigmatic elongated skulls, their condition as well as their origin. Scientists are expected to use traditional archeological historical and archival researcher together with cutting-edge scientific analysis in order to reveal the aspects of the people, their health, their way of life, and history in general.

St Joseph's chapel at the Citadel - Gozo

The chapel dedicated to St Joseph at the Citadel in Victoria. Photo: Charles Spiteri

In March 19, the Church celebrated the feast of St Joseph, patron of the Universal Church. In 1625, a chapel dedicated to the saint was raised on the site of an earlier chapel within the Citadel in Victoria through the munificence of Bishop Baldassare Cagliares (1615–1633). The simplicity of the façade with the typical round window above the door is balanced by the chequered arched ceiling inside.

The church was on the point of collapse several times. In the mid-1930s, it was extensively restored through the interest of Sir Harry Luke, then Lieutenant Governor of Malta. Fifty years later, in the 1980s, through the interest of Fr Tony Mercieca and Anthony Spiteri, a group of youths once again undertook the chapel's rehabilitation.

Bishop Cagliares, who also built the adjoining house, known as Palazzo Cagliares, adorned the chapel with a beautiful altarpiece – The Flight of Saint Joseph into Egypt – a work attributed to Filippo Paladino (1544-1616); but most probably it was acquired from abroad. The painting, notable for its realism and quaint detail, now hangs at the Cathedral Museum. The painting currently hanging inside the chapel is a 1980 copy by Vincenzo Cordina.

In 1672, the Cathedral Chapter started to solemnise the feast of St Joseph by chanting the first vespers and singing a High Mass at the chapel. Due to the restricted space inside the chapel, the feast was celebrated at the cathedral with sung Mass.

GREENS CANDIDATE FOR ADELAIDE (Federal) REBECCA GALDIES – An Australian of Maltese heritage

I was about 8 years old when my mum first took me to a protest march about freeing Xanana Guzman, the freedom fighter from East Timor who was seeking independence for his people from the oppressive regime of Indonesia. I was too young to fully understand what it meant, but still I understood enough to know that people were fighting for their freedom and that it was a worthy cause. My mum had explained to me that the people of East Timor were being treated as second class citizens and that they were being imprisoned for expressing their opposition to being controlled by the Indonesian military. I remember even standing outside a Garuda Indonesia travel office when I was a few years older. There were only a few of us there (Mum included of course) but we were loud!

Given this, it's hardly surprising that I choose to take up just about every minute of my spare time these days trying to get elected to parliament. It's not just about getting into parliament for me though, it's also about pursuing a fairer society for all, and one that doesn't destroy the planet - that's why I'm running for the Greens.

The last 2 years we've seen the reality of inequality brought into sharp relief by the pandemic that has ravaged the human population all around the globe. Close to 2.4 million Australians are casually employed and without holiday or sick leave. Going to work while sick during a pandemic can have fatal consequences, not just for the person going to work, but for anyone they come into contact with. We have all become far more familiar with the way pathogens work than most of us probably wanted to, since Covid-19 came about. We've been incredibly lucky here in Adelaide because we haven't had to experience anywhere near the level of lockdowns or restrictions that other cities around the country and the world have. But nevertheless, people have struggled.

It was only upon deciding to seriously contest a federal political seat, however, that I found out that, from birth, according to the Maltese government, I was a Maltese citizen! Even though I was born and raised in Adelaide (and went to the Maltese school in Beverly as a child), and I had gone through the process of applying for and receiving my Maltese passport, this fact had never occurred to me. You may remember back in 2017 when it came to light that a Greens politician by the name of Scott Ludlam had been informed by a lawyer that he was, in fact, a dual citizen of New Zealand (and Australia), and that meant he must immediately step down from his position as Senator. This set off a cascade of discoveries that happened to coincide with me being the National Secretary of the Australian Greens. I had been (and remain) close to Scott and was rocked by this oversight which quickly led to revelations that a number of Australian politicians across all parties had made the same error. Since then, the Australian Greens have developed a much more thorough process of checking these details and thus my process of renouncing my citizenship of Malta began. It was tough for me to make that decision, in part because I lost my dear father in 2017 after a long illness and felt very sad to let what felt like part of a connection to him go. Dad valued family above all and took great pride in being a hard worker, even when the economic system sought to shut him out as he got sicker. Seeing the way he struggled with the changing digital nature of his work as he got older and how increasingly brutal the neoliberal system was, is part of what drove me to pursue fairer outcomes for all workers. In the end, in an attempt to retain my sense of connection, I settled with getting a tattoo of the Maltese cross on my upper left arm which I reveal with pride during the summer months. I am safe in the knowledge that my father and my Maltese heritage will always be a core part of who I am.

Though running for office can be incredibly trying at times, as someone who has an unflinching faith in the idea of democracy, I wouldn't have it any other way. We are at a critical juncture as residents of this amazing planet and we are in a very powerful position as citizens of a wealthy country. We have a great opportunity with the upcoming election to vote for parties that recognise the importance of strong and immediate action on climate change and addressing the inequality that has corrupted our democracy. New dates announced for Mużika Mużika 2022

Jurgen Balzan

This year's Mużika Mużika festival will be held between 21 and 23 April at MFCC, Ta' Qali, Festivals Malta announced.

Logistical preparations for the festival are currently in full swing, with ongoing work to build this year's new stage, coordinate artist rehearsals, as well as various other preparations.

Festivals Malta announced that this year the festival will take place between 21 and 23 April at 9pm, live at MFCC, Ta' Qali, and said tickets for the three live events will go on sale in the coming days.

Arts minister José Herrera, said that the music festival regained its place in the Maltese cultural calendar after a long absence. "This festival has been so successful that we are committed to continue organising it on a yearly basis," Herrera said. Mużika Mużika chairman Raymond Bugeja recalled the success of the festival's first edition, which helped generate interest amongst local artists for this second edition.

"We have several new artists who are taking part in this festival, with the inclusion of a new semi-finalist selected from the television programme Mużika Mużika - Il-Vjaġġ Ikompli. This year we also continued to invest in the festival, with a new stage that has been specially designed for this edition," he said.

Bugeja also explained that this year's festival will be presented by three well-known figures in the local entertainment industry, namely Keith Demicoli, Clare Agius and Moira Delia.

Festivals Malta CEO Annabelle Stivala explained that unlike last year, the festival will be able to host a live audience, a new logistical aspect that the team behind the festival is already working towards. Stivala said that Mużika Mużika is an important festival within Festivals Malta's portfolio of events, because through this festival Maltese music is being preserved while also providing new opportunities to local artists.

"I am proud to say that last year we managed to achieve our main goal - to raise bar for compositions in Maltese. Therefore, Festivals Malta will continue to work to provide an appropriate platform for both Maltese song, singers, authors and composers," she said.

THE BUSKETT THE GARDENS (ITALIAN: BOSCHETTO)

This little forest forming one of the few woodland areas in Malta, is located in the fertile valley of Wied il-Luq in Siggiewi. The 30 ha site lies to the west of Siggiewi (Città Ferdinand) and just east of Dingli. The Verdala Palace, an official residence of the President of Malta, stands on the edge of the Gardens.

HISTORY The gardens know their origins at least since the post-Roman Republic period and in which sexual celebrations in honor of their gods were traditional. When Eastern Christianity took root in Malta, this pagan feast was replaced by the Christian celebrations of St. Peter and St. Paul. Indigenous forests once covered Malta, but trees were cut down for shipbuilding in the era when galleons plied the Mediterranean waters and for agricultural purposes. Buskett Gardens were planted by the Knights Hospitaller as a hunting reserve.

In June 1557, Grand Master Claude de la Sengle retreated to Buskett when his health began to deteriorate, and died at Mdina two months later.

DESCRIPTION The gardens contain broadleaved deciduous woodland, native coniferous woodland, with sclerophyllous garrigue and maquis shrubland, as well as groves of fruit trees. Many different trees and shrubs grow in the gardens, including numerous fruit-bearing trees. One of the greenest areas in Malta, the gardens are at their best in the spring but also provide shade from the harsh mid-summer sun and offer a quiet place for a walk in the winter months.

The gardens are very popular with the Maltese people, who often go for walks in the peaceful settings or enjoy a picnic in the shade of the trees. The gardens serve as a venue for the Feast of Imnarja which is celebrated on 29 June. Hundreds of people flock there the previous evening, to eat the traditional Maltese dish of rabbit stew cooked in wine, to listen to traditional folk music and singing, and to enjoy the annual agricultural show in the morning.

VERDALA PALACE The Verdala Palace is perched on a hilltop adjoining and overlooking Buskett Gardens. It was built by Grand Master Hughes de Verdalle in 1588 as a summer residence and hunting lodge. The building now serves as the President's summer residence. The palace is a landmark and not open to the public except for certain occasions.

The Imnarja festival at Buskett Gardens is also famous for the old tradition. It was a common custom that at the altar the bridegroom would have to solemnly promise the bride he would ensure annually take her to celebrate Mnarja at Buskett – as the main treat of her year!

IMPORTANT BIRD AREA The gardens have been identified as an Important Bird Area (IBA) by BirdLife International because they support large numbers of bird species, especially as a sanctuary to those on seasonal migration through the Maltese Archipelago.

JUM IL-HELSEN 31 Marzu
FREEDOM DAY 31 March

MARCH 31st, 1979 : Jum il-Helsien/ Freedom Day is a national holiday. It is the anniversary day on which the British government and the military presence which had been stationed there since before World War II were finally withdrawn from Malta and its sister island Gozo. During Freedom Day a ceremony commemorating the withdrawal of the British troops and the Royal Navy from Malta is held at the War Memorial in Floriana. In the afternoon the Grand Harbour hosts a traditional regatta. The monument in Vittoriosa, commemorates the departure of the British forces which left Malta on board the HMS London, bringing an end to a permanent military presence in the islands, and thus proclaimed as 'Freedom Day'

40 years of Maltese presence in New York 1982-2022

As you go through the first door of the Maltese Center you may or may not have noticed a simple wood plaque on the wall in the vestibule that commemorates the day that first door you passed through officially opened. Some of you reading this may have never visited and some of you pass through that door every weekend. This plaque can easily go unnoticed but it is precious. It signifies so much more than a high level visit on that day but a pride and vision of a community with roots from one of the smallest nations living in one of the biggest and most competitive cities in the world. A community who was in transition to grow and succeed in New York but also hold onto their identity. This was not the first Maltese club to exist. There were many around the city but one by one their doors closed. The clubs reorganized over the years and here we are the only club in New York and possibly the only one in the northeast. Next time you visit, stop and take a look at that simple wood plaque, it really is precious.

Throughout the year we will be taking a look back at the Maltese Center. Please share your photos or memories with us in an email. Plans are in the works to celebrate this very special anniversary this fall. We are grateful to all those who laid the foundation and thankful to all who help us to continue and GROW.

~ The Roman Baths at Ghajn Tuffieħa

Many archaeological remains are found by chance, when digging for other reasons. The remains of Roman baths at Ghajn Tuffieħa are such a case, discovered in 1929 during government works to use a fresh water spring to water fields in the area. This and other nearby springs might explain why the baths, which needed a constant flow of large amounts of water, were built at Ghajn Tuffieħa. Although the area is rather deserted today, it was quite heavily populated in Roman times, as testified by burials in Zebbiegħ and Mġarr – in fact this was true of the entire area from Rabat/Mdina to the nearby ports of Ġnejna Ghajn Tuffieħa, and Burmarrad.

Although it has not as yet been totally excavated, it would seem that the site was quite large, with a communal latrine and possibly a small and rudimentary hotel-like structure in which people could stay overnight, however little is left of that other than the baths.

These baths date to between the end of the 1st and the beginning of the 2nd century AD. As in the case of the Roman House at Rabat, this complex gives an idea of the leisurely life enjoyed by the Romans in Malta.

The Roman baths complex has everything one would expect to find in Roman baths of the time, with bathers first entering a tepidarium for a warm air, then to the caldarium, similar to a sauna, where after profuse perspiration the bather took a warm bath. This was followed by a cold dip in the cold room or figidarium. Heat was provided by a furnace beneath the caldarium which also provided a form of 'central heating' to the rest of the structure. The caldarium had an important role in Roman life, serving as a meeting place. Each room was fed by tunnels channelling the water flow and supplied with heat by an underground furnace or hypocaustum, similar to central heating. The caldarium at Ghajn Tuffieħa was built on arches so that the water could be heated.

Apart from all this, there was also a large swimming pool, the natatio. Another room had stone benches on three sides, one foot high, with nine circular holes cut in serve as toilet seats. The stone seating-slabs could be lifted to inspect and clean the space beneath as well as to lay fresh soil to cover the dirt [1].

The corridor is paved with earthenware tiles, the tepidarium with a beautiful coloured mosaic pavement though sadly the mosaic floor of the frigidarium is worn out due to exposure to the elements.

At the moment these Roman Baths are not open to the public and are not in a good state. Excavation had begun in 1929 under Sir Temi Zammit. In 1961, the site's mosaics underwent restoration sponsored by UNESCO when rooms were built to shelter and protect the remains however, these rooms exerted pressure on the mosaics causing damage.

In recent years from the UNESCO funded the Malta Mosaics Project, which mapped mosaics and pavements at Ghajn Tuffieħa and the Domvs Romana. The analysis of this mapping has resulted in a detailed conservation plan which should be actioned in the coming years.

Excavations carried out in 2014 formed part of a €6 million project entitled For a Rehabilitation of the Roman Baths and Christian Catacombs at Mosta and Mġarr, part-funded by EU Rural Development Funds. The two sites are not linked in any way, and the project intends to clean and open up the catacombs at Ta' Bistra in Mosta. The project intended to fully explore the entire area of the Roman Baths near Ghajn Tuffieħa, and subsequently roof over the site and set up an interpretation centre.

Six Roman bath complexes are known to have been discovered around Malta, including one, improbably, in Floriana. Others have been found at Ramla l-Ħamra in Gozo and Marsaxlokk.

ROMAN BATHS AT TA' BANDLU

Roman Baths were revealed in a location close to Misrah Suffara, called Ta' Baldu, probably a corruption of the name Teobald. They were first mentioned by Dr A. Caruana in 1882. (The site is characterized by two oblong farmhouses possibly dating to the 17th century.) Both farmhouses are typical of vernacular architecture and are found within a rural setting that has until 2004 remained mostly unchanged for the past 300 hundred years. Close to the farmhouses are a number of rubble walls, some of exceptional workmanship and soaring up to 5m in height.

Within the ridge beneath the farmhouses are a number of differently sized caves. Amongst these a rock-cut chamber believed to have served as a bathing place during the Early-modern period, and another larger cave containing water reservoirs, the date '1629' inscribed on one of the rock walls, a stone table and benches, and a Roman olive crusher (trapetum). The presence of this trapetum implies the existence of a Roman rustic villa in the vicinity. Between 1664 and 1665, a German traveler called Schellinkx described and published an illustration of the afore-mentioned features, which are still extant on site, though their conservation in-situ has now become under threat owing to the ongoing development taking place without any regard to permit requirements and best practice in conservation. The second farmhouse is being restored according to planning permit conditions and approved restoration method statement.

The building now converted into a science- and technology centre-ESPLORA

Thanks to the presence in Malta for three-and-a-half centuries of the Knights of the Order of St John of Jerusalem, also known as The Knight Hospitaliers, the country has a long and experienced medical history and in World War I was regarded as “The nurse of the Mediterranean” for its medical treatment of wounded and injured British and Australian military personnel.

The role and importance of the Order has today declined but their presence is still felt by the work of the St John Ambulance Brigade, the role they perform and the insignia they use – its central focus being the Maltese Cross.

The Knights first came to Malta in the early years of the 15th century after being expelled by the Turkish Moors from Rhodes. The source of their foundation was a Nobility Order dedicated to treating the injured and wounded during the Crusades in the Holy Land and later treating Christian pilgrims.

OUR STORY We are a proud family business that has been operating for over 50 years. Established by Charlie and Rose Grima (as C&R Grima) in the 1960s, the farm has been managed by three generations of family members. In 2003, upon their retirement, Charlie and Rose passed the farm onto their daughter Marion and her husband Joe; who then changed the business name to Fenech Family Farm. Joe, his son Matthew and his wife Pauline are the current owners.

Throughout the years, our values and work ethic remain unchanged. We are committed to providing our customers with quality products, efficient service and affordable prices.

We are current members of Australian Eggs and NSW Farmer's Association. We also have a 5 star rating from the NSW Food Authority. We ensure that we keep up to date with the latest research and technology within our industry. We are also constantly updating our skills, services and products available to meet our customers' needs.

Our customers are our number one priority. Indeed, we pride ourselves on our loyal and growing customer base, both local and from all four corners of Sydney. We love the fact that our customers (many of whom are second generation customers) tell us that when it comes to eggs and other farm products they wouldn't shop anywhere else!

OUR PHILOSOPHY Our philosophy is a simple one: To grow and source the freshest eggs, game meat and seasonal produce for our customers.

OUR TEAM As our business has grown, we have been fortunate enough to employ a number of staff to assist us with the day to day running of our farms, retail outlet and wholesale operations.

It takes a lot of work to successfully manage a modern day farm. We have a fantastic team of staff who each play their part to keep Fenech Family Farm going strong. This includes picking eggs, grading eggs, farmhand work, delivery drivers for wholesale deliveries, retail staff in our shop, office staff and management. Every single member of our staff plays an important.

Our Maltese Associations are the backbone of the community - Support them

We are calling for volunteers to help with and join in the Melbourne Anzac Day March. Many ex-service people have passed away or are in poor health and unless we find volunteers to participate there is a likely possibility we will not be able to participate in this tradition as I'm sure you would agree it would be grate loss to the Maltese Australian community not to see the Maltese participating on the ANZAC day March.
